CUSTOM DESIGN TRANSFORMS A HOUSE INTO A HOME

The ability of interior designer Lisa Pearce and design associate Kristy Hagelstein, combined with the creativity of architect Paul Jones to bring out even more of the stunning beauty of this recently remodeled Naples home.

The homeowners, a couple hailing from the cold climes of upstate New York, were interested in enjoying the warm weather as much as possible and didn't want to wait to build their residence from scratch. But they were also very interested in transforming any existing house into their own—one that reflects their shared interests and aesthetic taste in contemporary design.

Before making a decision to build a new home, the couple spent time in the local market. They visited a variety of homes in the Naples area, including the design firm's own home. The homeowners were particularly impressed with the design firm's own home, which they visited several times. The design firm's own home is a perfect example of the design firm's philosophy: a home that is both beautiful and functional.

Right at the heart of custom design is the client. The design firm's philosophy is to create a home that is truly unique and reflects the client's personality. The design firm's own home is a perfect example of this philosophy: a home that is both beautiful and functional.

Pearce & Co. chose the existing location for the breakfast bar, which was a great choice. After the design team of Pearce and Hagelstein from Design Associates, who worked very closely with the client, they were able to bring their vision to life. The design firm's philosophy is to create a home that is truly unique and reflects the client's personality.

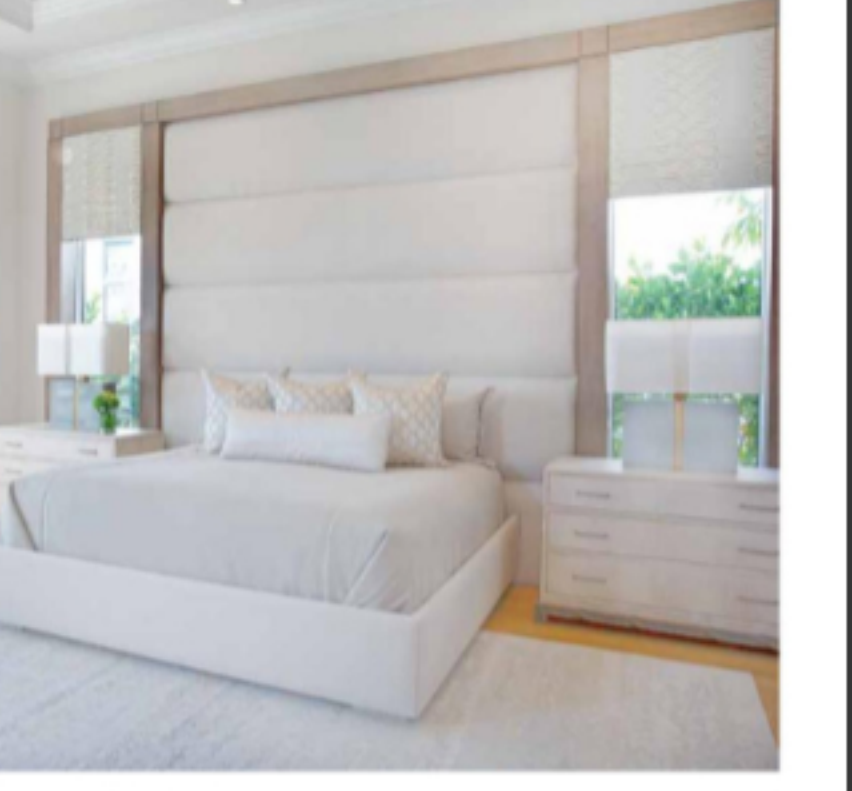

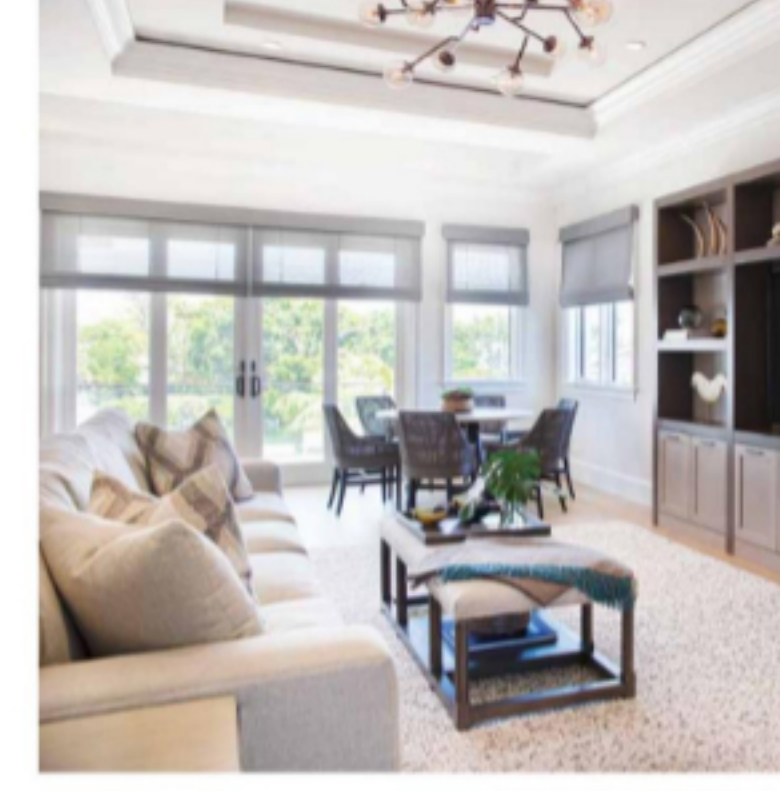

Pearce and Hagelstein worked with Jones on the interior as well. "Creating a new design for the stairway, an entry different piece, opened up the entry foyer for entertaining," Jones says. "And creating a wall of glass at one of the home's main levels brought in even more light to the interior."

Jones continued, "I am delighted to get to know the clients well and personalize the house just for them." Hagelstein and Pearce agree, adding, "There were one-of-a-kind clients, and we wanted them to have a home that is as unique and special as they are."
